Advances in biotechnologies present ordinary families living with genetic disease, disability or difference with some of the most challenging decisions gripping society today. Through assisted reproductive technologies (ART) like pre-implantation genetic diagnosis (PGD) and pre-implantation tissue typing (PTT) we are altering the make-up of society at a molecular level. This transdisciplinary practice-based research project looks at advances in genetics and biotechnologies through photographic portraiture. The work aims to explore the fault lines where medicine, technology and society meet.
